

Bank of England 21/09/2022

Last Wednesday, some of our HTW group visited the Bank of England museum- a few of us stopping off on the way for lunch first. We didn't qualify for the free talk as there weren't enough of us but luckily, one of our group had "friends (or in this case, nephew) in high places". He agreed to meet us inside and have a chat with us about many different aspects of the bank. It was extremely interesting and very kind of him.

One of the exhibits is a solid gold bar inside a glass case with a porthole for you to insert a hand and try to lift it- as it weighs 13kg, it is not easy to do and quite how they managed to carry so many of them in the film "The Italian Job" is a mystery 😊

If you get the opportunity to go, it's well worth a visit.

Kind Regards, Yvonne
